It is known that the Uzbek people have always been distinguished by their childishness and family spirit. Of course, loving children, feeding them and making them happy in their own way is important, but raising our children from a young age on the basis of national education, morality, and high spirituality has always been of great importance to us. Many real-life examples show that ignoring this issue is very costly not only for some parents, but also for the entire society. Because the purest and most pure feelings of a person, the first life concepts and ideas are formed primarily in the family. It is natural that the foundation of the spiritual criteria and views that determine the character, nature and worldview of a child - such sacred concepts as goodness and virtue, nobility and kindness, honor and thoughtfulness - is laid in the family environment. That is why respect for parents, a deep understanding of the lifelong debt to them, which arises in the family environment, are the basis of human qualities and family relationships inherent in any person, the spiritual world of the family. Numerous scientific observations and studies show that 70 percent of all the information a person receives during his life is received by the age of 5. Today, the vital call "Our children must be stronger, more educated, wiser and, of course, happier than us!" has taken a firm place in the minds and hearts of each of us, parents and the general public. Currently, 32 percent of the population of our country, or 10 million, are young people under the age of 30. The fact that our youth are rightfully capable of taking responsibility for the future of our Motherland and are becoming the decisive force of our present and future gives us all pride and honor. We need to bring our large-scale work in this area, in particular, our adopted nationwide programs on education, to a logical conclusion. To this end, the most important task of the Government, relevant ministries and departments, as well as the entire education system, our esteemed teachers and professors is to provide a thorough education to the younger generation, to raise them to physical and spiritual maturity. The times themselves demand that we raise our work aimed at creating modern workplaces for our children and ensuring their worthy place in life to a new level. We will continue the state policy on youth without any deviations and with determination. We will not only continue, but also raise this policy to the high level that our time demands today.

We mobilize all the forces and capabilities of our state and society so that our youth can develop into independent-thinking, highly intellectual and spiritually capable people who are not inferior to their peers in any field in the world. In our country, care for orphans and children deprived of parental care is also specifically provided for in the following article of the Constitution of the Republic of Uzbekistan on the family. (Article 64.)

Parents are obliged to raise and educate their children until they reach adulthood. The state and society ensure the raising, upbringing and education of orphans and children deprived of parental care, and encourage charitable activities dedicated to children.

In order to ensure the interdependence of the educational process and the family in independent-minded youth, one of the main factors in forming a healthy spiritual environment in the family is, first of all, increasing the interest of the younger generation in books. It is no exaggeration to say that this urgent issue is currently one of the main tasks of state importance. Based on these tasks, the “Young Book Reader” competition, organized in accordance with the Resolution of the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan “On measures to improve the activities of the Youth Union of Uzbekistan” No. PQ-3138, is one of the most prestigious competitions in our Republic, aimed at developing book reading and a culture of reading among young people. The main goal of organizing the competition is to increase book reading and a culture of reading among children and young people, to raise their intellectual potential and spiritual level.

In raising the younger generation as independent thinkers and intellectually capable, the education system and the family environment are one of the most important aspects of mutual interaction. For this reason, it is advisable to establish a “library” in every family when raising the younger generation. At the same time, in order for a child to become a complete person, it is necessary that the relationships between the school community and family members are constantly built on mutual trust. After all, each of us should not forget one specific truth, this truth is such that we should be proud and honored not with our career, wealth or “luxury home”, but with our child who has received a comprehensive education and upbringing. Against the background of these goals, of course, being friends with books should become the motto of each of us and every day.
